Claybank Brick Plant National Historic Site of Canada is a former industrial complex used for the manufacture of clay bricks from 1914 to 1989. It is located in a predominantly rural area of south-central Saskatchewan, along the Dirt Hills of the Missouri Coteau, near the communities of Claybank and Avonlea. The core of the 132-hectare site is a 37-hectare plant area containing buildings dating from the 1912-1937 period: a factory building, 10 kilns, a laboratory, an office building, a boiler room, stock sheds, a carpentry shop, residences, outhouses, and a bunkhouse. The site as a whole extends over a broad area encompassing internal road and path networks, the main approach to the plant, vestiges of industrial processes, the narrow-gauge rail line and a spur line that were used as part of an internal and external transportation system, and the clay pits in the Dirt Hills, from which clay was extracted for brick construction.

Moose Jaw, SK

Moose Jaw, the fourth largest city of Saskatchewan, is situated about 80 km west of Regina on the Trans-Canada Highway at the intersection of Highway 1 and Highway 2. The city is in the heart of Canada's great wheat belt and is best known as a gateway to Southwest Saskatchewan. It is also known as a tourist and historical city and offers many attractions to its visitors. A mineral spa, the tunnels of Moose Jaw, and Wakamow Valley to name a few of them. Guided trolley tours of the city on a replica electric street car operated by tourism Moose Jaw are an interesting way to explore the downtown core and the attractions of the city. The starting point of these tours is only at a walking distance from the proposed accommodation.
